The 11th International Conference on Stress Wave Theory for Deep Foundations' will take place from 20 - 23 September 2022 in Rotterdam, The Netherlands. This Conference will be accompanied by an exhibition where more than 30 companies can present their services and products to more than 300 delegates. The organisation has prepared several options to increase your visibility.

CONFERENCE OBJECTIVES AND THEMES

The main objective of the conference is to create a forum for the exchange of knowledge, ideas and experience regarding the application of stress-wave theory to piles, subsoil and foundation engineering, as well as developments in Design and Testing Methods for these applications. The conference intends to bring together researchers, equipment manufacturers, installation contractors, as well as design and testing engineers. In order to give all participants the opportunity to present, the conference format will include concurrent sessions, with plenary sessions for invited keynote speakers, and the presentation and discussion of selected papers.

DEMONSTRATION, TESTING & PREDICTION EVENT

One of the conference days will be dedicated to practical applications of stress wave theory to piles. On reclaimed land at the Port of Rotterdam (Maasvlakte), a site will be prepared for pile testing, offering comparison and analysis of results of different testing methods. Tests will have been performed in advance, the results of which will be presented during this event. Testing methods will be demonstrated throughout the day, as well as installation equipment for sheet piles, precast and in-situ piles, and (offshore) monopiles. Advantages of different pile installation methods will be demonstrated in real time during a pile driving competition.
